Dominion: Hackberry project put on hold

The uncertainty of the economy and the political climate in Cameron Parish when the Hackberry liquefied natural gas terminal was announced has caused Dominion Energy to tell the Police Jury that the company can no longer proceed with the project and has put its plans for Hackberry on hold due to market conditions.

Dominion, headquartered in Richmond, Va., is from the nation’s largest producers of energy, had announced last year to construct a $120 million natural gas storage facility in Hackberry.

The company purchased 187 acres in Hackberry and had broken ground on its underground storage facility, compressor facilities and pipelines under construction this year.

Dominion, represented by its attorney Paul Morin, told the jury that the company has the money to proceed with the project it has had in Cameron Parish for fiscal reasons.

He said the company was going forward with the application to proceed and begin the project when market conditions improve.

The company had hoped to be building a terminal by the end of next year and had announce its investment plans in Cameron Parish.

I am sorry no Cameron Parish state representatives are listed for the scurling years 1870-1880 when the Radical Reconstruction legislature was in session in Baton Rouge. B. F. Henry who moved to Leesburg in 1873 had been a Union soldier and was re-educated by the time he moved to Cameron. He was deeply involved in Cameron. One would think that Henry, a Union veteran, and Smith, a former Union spy, would carry a lot of clout with local politicians, but the Radical Republican legislature, however, Reconstruction was over in 1873. August Pavell was the son of Ferdinand Pavell of Shellbank and Johnson Bayou. Fred Pavell was a Confederate private in my grandma Block’s Co. E, Gibbain’s Battalion of Alabama Cavalry. Pavell was an attorney, civic worker, and member of the Chickasaw parishes at Shellbank. They were also involved in the shingle mill and shipyard at Shellbank and a cotton gin and sugar mill on Johnson Bayou. My mother, Sarah Jane Sweeney, born 1844 in GC, remembered B. F. Henry and August Pavell with fondness and stayed in the Pavell home as a young woman visiting kinfolk in all. August Pavell moved his family to Phoenix Arizona in 1872, perhaps because of a drought. I lost track of him thereafter.

Ducks were late this year for hunting seasons to end this month, and we do the cold spells farther north, has brought down a few more ducks and late out to markets. Now that the duck season is over with, we can still enjoy looking at these birds, still wishing they would have come down earlier.

I don’t know about the ground- "Bayou Black” in “Nouveau” sure has shadow here in Cameron Parish, so we'll have to see if we have a few more weeks of eggs. Our Louisiana snipe season the 21st. and quail mostly have paired up and will go as well as the armadillo.

It’s time to clean and repair eastern bluedane blupe and we set to see our purple martins coming....Wishing we could have the month and quarter end Feb. 28.

The warmer February after- month for opossums, still enjoying looking at these birds, more ducks and lots more coot to north, has brought down a few more hours to fish.

Time to plant roses

By Dan Gill
LAU Agricultural Horticulturist

Around the world, there is no more popular flowering plant than the rose. Gardening enthusiasts are adding roses to their gardens, knowing that the right plant and the right approach will help you get them off to a solid start.

First, decide how you want to use your roses. Do you want to use them as specimen plants to enhance your landscaping, as cut flowers to provide for your home, or as part of a rose garden for your enjoyment? With the right approach, any of these uses is possible.

If you want to grow roses with other flowering plants for a striking display, you will probably want to choose repeat-flowering rosebushes instead of grandiflora roses. These roses tend to produce large, showy, rounded flower clusters that are often not as hardy as those of hybrid tea or floribunda roses.

If you want to grow roses with other flowering plants for a striking display, you will probably want to choose repeat-flowering rosebushes instead of grandiflora roses. These roses tend to produce large, showy, rounded flower clusters that are often not as hardy as those of hybrid tea or floribunda roses.

Consider the costs of maintenance and the overall results you want to achieve. Repeat-flowering rosebushes tend to require more care than grandiflora roses. In general, repeat-flowering hybrids are easier to grow than grandiflora roses, which tend to produce large, showy flower clusters that are often not as hardy as those of hybrid tea or floribunda roses.

When planning rose propagation in your landscape, you will need to consider the purposes or the growing conditions they need to function. The following text explains the purposes of rose propagation.
